

SON'S MOTHER INVOKES POLICE AID TO BREAK UP SICK-BED COURTSHIP

Miss May Lawson and Thomas Cox, whose romance was shattered by his mother, Mrs. Adelaide Wise, in the lower picture.

Los Angeles, Cal.—The strange love triangle formed across the sick-bed of an invalid boy will be broken by a trip abroad as soon as Thomas

Cox, the son of Mrs. Adelaide Wise of Glendale, a suburb of this city, is able to travel.

The two sweethearts—young Cox and May Lawson, also of Glendale—were separated by the mother's orders. She invoked the aid of the law to keep Miss Lawson from seeing the boy.

"We are going to travel, Tom and I, and forget all about it," said Mrs. Wise recently at the youth's bed in his open-air tent. "I want to break up this affair between my son and May, because it is necessary for his health. And he is willing now that it should be done."

The story of a devoted love between the two young people, as told by Miss Lawson, rivals a Robert W. Chambers' story.

"But I will not ask to see him again, or go near him, if he does not want me," said the girl.
